R-Squared Productions Intern Makes a Difference

MONROE, LA, August 16, 2012— When R-Squared Productions set out to host the R-Squared Film Festival in early 2011, the plan was to evaluate local talent and develop their skills. Plus, the Monroe, LA-based film company wanted to invest in the area's students. Little did they know, one student was ready and willing to return the favor.

Fifteen year old Josh Fuller, a rising freshman at West Monroe High School, led his team to victory in the middle school category of the festival's short film competition. During the filming of New Hope, the company's latest film which is due out on DVD internationally in October, Josh volunteered on-set in the camera and production departments, earning the credits of "Assistant to the Director" and "Production Intern."

This summer, Josh continued to volunteer with R-Squared Productions in their office's production department. "Having Josh around is refreshing," said Executive Producer Rodney Ray. "To see his talent, passion, and creativity at such a young age is a challenge to our entire staff. He was instrumental in making several projects happen this summer, including taking inventory of our new production truck – and making sure everything worked correctly!"

"It has been so cool to walk in the office each morning and see Josh hard at work – volunteering simply because he enjoys what he's doing and is learning new things every day," said Greg

Ziecker, the company's Marketing Director. "I wish I had had the same drive to learn new things at that age."

Ray said that R-Squared Productions is always looking for new interns to share their ideas, learn new techniques, and help the company achieve its goal of making "Life Changing Films." "Both Greg and Josh are perfect examples of the opportunities that come with being an intern," said Ray. "Greg started as an intern with us just before we began shooting New Hope, and now he is a valuable full-time member of our team, and we hope we can say the same for Josh in the future." Those interested in becoming an intern at R-Squared Productions should email their resumes to info@r2films.net.
